

Congratulations! You have just downloaded the free literature based unit on Goodnight Moon, by Margaret Wise Brown and illustrated by Eloise Wilkins! This unit is from Before Five in a Row, written by Jane Claire Lambert.

This unit based on Goodnight Moon is a favorite among “rowers” and has a great FoldNLearn to go along with it! (Subscribe to the blog to have access to all of our free FoldNLeads!) Goodnight Moon is a favorite book in homes of Five in a Row families all around the world, and we expect it will quickly be a favorite of your family as well!

There is one important matter we feel can’t go unaddressed as we offer you this sample. Before Five in a Row is comprised of many unique and individual activity units, each based on a different children’s book. Each one of these books is appropriate for different levels of emotional maturity, as are the units and related lessons themselves, though Before Five in a Row is not written as a rigorous academic curriculum. It is intended to be a happy introduction to books, and the lessons are intended to lay a foundation of the academic learning that is to come. Some of the books are out of print, but most families do well finding them at their local library or through inter-library loan.

Goodnight Moon is considered one of our “younger” stories. We believe it’s a great starting point, so it only made sense to choose this for our sample unit. The book is unique, and therefore you’ll find the lessons in the unit are unique. Each book lends itself to different activities on a wide variety of topics, each offering different levels of exposure. For example, if this unit has more literature and less art, another book will fill in where this unit may seem to lack. So as you enjoy this unit with your children, the important point to understand is that this unit is only one small fraction and one very unique slice of Before Five in a Row, just one small part of a whole that will lead your family on a delightful journey of loving learning!

The second half of the Before Five in a Row manual is comprised of non-book-specific activities for learning readiness including coordination, development of large & small motor skills, activities at bath time, in the kitchen, in the store, toys, the arts and some encouraging notes from Jane Claire as well.

GOODNIGHT MOON

Title: Goodnight Moon
Author: Margaret Wise Brown
Illustrator: Clement Hurd
Copyright: 1947

Or you can read Genesis 1:14-19 and share with your child briefly about the creation of the sun, moon and stars which took place on the fourth day of creation.

Summary

Gentleness and rhythmic calm prevail as a young bunny prepares for bedtime and says goodnight to each familiar object in his room, including the moon in his window!

Bible

Read Psalm 127:2b about God giving to His beloved, even in their sleep. It is a wonder to consider that even while sleeping, the Lord is aware and giving. Discuss this idea with your child.

Art

Notice with your child the first picture of the story. The room is lighted (from the fireplace and at least one lamp) so the outside, beyond the window looks very dark. In the last picture, the room is dark and now the outside looks bright. Looking through the pictures in-between, does it slowly become lighter outside? No, it just appears lighter as the room becomes darker. At night you can show your child how this concept works, as our eyes become accustomed to the dark and the outside lights seem brighter.

Bright primary and secondary colors are used in this art work. You may want to take this opportunity to learn red, yellow and blue as the primary colors. If there is a great deal of interest, and if your child is inquiring about the green used, you can decide if going on to teach the secondary colors and how they are derived from the primary colors is appropriate at this time.

On the third double-page, color illustration, there is a picture hanging on the wall over the dollhouse and bookcase. It looks like a bunny fishing for a bunny. The picture is from another book written by the author of Goodnight Moon, called The Runaway Bunny. The same illustrator, Clement Hurd, created the pictures for both books. If your child knows Runaway Bunny, he will recognize the picture of the bunny fisherman. If not, Runaway Bunny is included in the lesson plans of this manual and when you get to that book, reread Goodnight Moon and see if your child notices the picture!

Science: Zoology

Talk about and point out different kinds of animals included in the text or illustrations of Goodnight Moon. Look in the text for new animals to add to your classification game begun in Blueberries for Sal. You may want to make additional index cards for cows, bears, mice, elephants, giraffes, cats, rabbits, etc.

Memory

Play a memory game. First, read the story. Then look at the picture of the room. Close the book and try to remember as many items and details as possible.

Literature: Nursery Rhymes

The story makes reference to the nursery rhyme "Hey Diddle Diddle" where the "cow jumps over the moon." If your child isn't familiar with this rhyme, it might be a good time to share it with him. Nursery rhymes can provide beginning "sound" recognition and introduce the appreciation of rhyming poetry. Also, just as there was an allusion to a well-known rhyme in this story, there are many references made in literature to famous nursery rhymes. So, the knowledge of them increases your child's cultural literacy. In other words, as your child is presented with these references, he will recognize the source and often appreciate the reason why an author included such rhymes in his story.

Literature: Storytelling

In the first illustration, there is a picture on the wall of three bears sitting in chairs. Does your child know the story of Goldilocks and the Three Bears? If not, you might want to share it now. Your child will then recognize the source of the three bears picture in future readings of Goodnight Moon.

Another storytelling project you might want to try is to use the pattern of story line in Goodnight Moon. In this way, your child might make up a story about saying "Hello" to everything around him in the morning. The light would get brighter and brighter and each item could be mentioned as the room "awakened."

Parent's Note

Like Margaret Wise Brown, Eloise Wilkin has written another wonderful "goodnight" book that you might like to find. It is called My Goodnight Book, 1981 Golden Press, ISBN 0307122581. It comes in the hard cardboard, young child's format and has beautiful, soothing pictures.

Vocabulary

This story uses the word great to mean big. Talk with your older child about this usage and also other ways to use great, such as great meaning fantastic, or great meaning influential or powerful, etc.

Shapes

Goodnight Moon has many shapes represented in the illustrations. Talk about circles, squares, triangles, etc., and let your child look for these shapes as he examines the illustrations during future readings.

Art

If your child loves this story and would enjoy having a Goodnight Moon print, you can order one from your local bookstore. Ask for ISBN 1568900856 from Harper and Row.
